

Alan Freeman is an economist in Greater London Authority Economics, a special unit set up in 2002 to provide a firm statistical, factual and forecasting basis for policy decision-making by the GLA and its functional bodies. He is a visiting fellow of the University of Greenwich, where he lectured in Economics from 1992 until 2002. Prior to that, he has worked variously as an IT researcher, freelance programmer, technical author, trainer and journalist. Alan Freeman received his MSc in Economics from Birkbeck College in 1982 and his first degree, in Mathematics, was from University College London.
