

Additional educational support

Many students choose to pay for teaching support at a local independent institution in order to benefit from face-to-face interaction with academics and other students. We have created a network of institutions that offer study support to External students within our Institutions Policy Framework, so that you can rely on the standards of the teaching, support and administration that you will receive.

These institutions are known as recognised centres and are awarded either Affiliate Centre or Registered Centre status. Recognised centre status applies to specific programmes on certain campuses. These Centres have demonstrated a long-term commitment to quality of teaching, support and administration.

The fact that an institution has been awarded this status should act as a guide to students looking for additional support within their own country. However, we cannot advise you on which institution is best for you. Ultimately, you must choose an institution that meets your own needs.

The Diploma in Economics/Diploma in Social Sciences may be studied either full time or part time. Students must have registered through, and be studying at, a teaching institution that has been recognised for teaching these Diplomas by the University of London. In the following list, institutions that are recognised for teaching the Diplomas are marked:
