

Department of Social Policy

Social Policy Undergraduate and Postgraduate course brochure 2023/24

Welcome

This guide is designed to provide you with information to assist you in your course selections. It will provide you with additional information as to the content of optional courses, along with details of assessment methods and teaching terms.

This information is intended as a guide only, is not exhaustive and is subject to change. The School's online course guides should be consulted for the most up to date information.

The number of courses required to be taken as a part of your programme and the number of options you have available to you to choose at your discretion are detailed in your relevant programme regulations.

You can find the online course guides and confirmation of your programme regulations using the School Calendar: lse.ac.uk/resources/calendar
 Details of teaching terms can be found using the online timetable, which is updated for the next academic year during the preceding summer: info.lse.ac.uk/current-students/timetables

Undergraduate courses

COURSE CODE	COURSE TITLE	UNIT	TEACHING TERM	PAGE
SP100	Understanding International Social and Public Policy	1 unit	AT/WT	4
SP101	Foundations of Social Policy Research	1 unit	AT/WT	4
SP111	Social Economics and Policy	1 unit	AT/WT	5
SP112	Politics of Social Policy Making	1 unit	AT/WT	6
SP200	Comparative and International Social Policy	1 unit	AT/WT	6
SP201	Research Methods for Social Policy	1 unit	AT/WT	7
SP210	Development and Social Change	1 unit	AT/WT	7
SP230	Education Policy	1 Unit	AT/WT	8
SP231	Poverty, Inequality, and Social Policy	1 unit	AT/WT	8
SP315	Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global Souths	0.5 unit	WT	9
SP331	Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries	0.5 Unit	WT	10
SP332	Social Security Policies	0.5 Unit	WT	11
SP333	NGOs, Social Policy and Development	0.5 Unit	AT	12
SP335	Migration: Current Research, Critical Approaches	0.5 Unit	AT	12
SP336	Behavioural Public Policy	0.5 Unit	WT	13
SP372	Punishment and Penal Policy	0.5 unit	WT	13
Undergraduate Academic and Professional Skills Development Programme		0 unit	AT/WT	14

KEY

COURSE VALUE

0 unit 0.5 unit 1 unit

TEACHING TERM

Autumn Term (AT) Winter Term (WT) Both Autumn and Winter (AT/WT)

Undergraduate course summary

Course Code SP100

Course Title Understanding International Social and Public Policy

Value 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WT

Assessment Method Online Assessment, Coursework

The course introduces students to the study and practice of international social and public policy. It considers how societies organise to address social needs, with reference to academic and policy debates across the so-called global North and South.

In the first half of the course (Autumn Term), you will develop your understanding of how welfare systems have developed and of the institutions and actors involved in different contexts across the world, including the state, market, civil society and families.

In the second half (Winter Term), you will consider the challenge of inequality and how different approaches in social policy, involving those institutions and actors, can redress or reinforce inequalities.

Course Code SP101

Course Title Foundations of Social Policy Research

Value 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WT

Assessment Method Essay and Quiz

This course is concerned with two questions that are essential to the study of social and public policy. First, how do we know what policies are needed, how they are experienced and whether they are effective? And second, how is this knowledge used: how (if at all) does it feed into the policy process and improve policies and outcomes?

SP101 aims to equip students to become informed consumers of research, able to read and evaluate research outputs that use a range of approaches to address questions in social and public policy. Students will be encouraged to think critically about the way that knowledge is constructed, about the nature of expertise, and about the influence of values and positionality on knowledge production. They will learn to assess the validity of claims made on the basis of research studies that use a variety of methods. The course will also explore the way evidence is used in policy making and in public discourse.

The course provides the foundations for students to become active researchers themselves in later stages of the BSc ISPP degrees, preparing them for the second year research methods course and for their third year dissertation.

Course Code SP111

Course Title Social Economics and Policy

Value 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

This course provides an introduction to the economics of social policy and the economics of income distribution. The course begins by introducing basic economic concepts and principles and discussing their application to different social policy areas, including childcare, education, health care, social care, housing and the environment. Key concepts include supply, demand and elasticities, externalities and market failure, private insurance and social insurance.

The course goes on to analyse the distribution of household income, poverty and inequality, labour market earnings, and unemployment. It covers concepts of human capital and productivity and looks at a range of policies, including minimum wage legislation, taxation and the social security system.

Throughout, the course emphasises the importance of understanding political goals in assessing the effectiveness or justice of economic and social policies, and seeks to encourage students to draw on both theory and empirical evidence in addressing its core questions.

The course uses charts but is taught without mathematics and is designed to be suitable both for students with no prior knowledge of economics and for those who have taken A level economics.

Course Code SP112Course Title Politics of Social Policy MakingValue 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WTAssessment Method Essay, Presentation and Project

The course introduces students to the way in which social and public policies are developed. It aims to provide tools to understand how policies are produced through political disagreement and negotiations and how policies reflect different needs and problems voiced by groups in societies. It focuses on the ways in which policy processes and decision making can be analysed. The course focuses on different models that are used in the analyses of policy processes in different international contexts. Furthermore, it links different analytical approaches to policy processes with political considerations of how political problems are framed and how policy goals are established. The course looks at these issues from the perspective of different actors and the ways in which different actors interact with each other within policy processes. The course brings together critical analytical frameworks for policy processes with empirical problems (cases). The course enables students to understand that policy processes are both about understanding society and shaping it. Furthermore, it introduces students to the various policy actors, including international actors and how these actors work together within socio-political and economic constraints. It also highlights the importance of identifying and understanding the different value positions and the associated negotiations that underwrite policy processes.

Course Code SP200Course Title Comparative and International Social PolicyValue 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WTAssessment Method Online Assessment

The course introduces the comparative method in social policy research as well as the main analytical approaches to understanding social policy developments. It provides an overview of social policies in different areas of the world and enables students to identify global pressures on national policy environments. The course also examines the impact of key international and supranational institutions on social policy-making. It investigates the welfare and work nexus from a comparative perspective.

This course is only available to students who have completed Understanding International Social and Public Policy (SP100).

Course Code SP201Course Title Research Methods for Social PolicyValue 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WTAssessment Method Project and take-home assessment

This course introduces students to tools used by scholars and practitioners in the study of social policy, focusing on their application to addressing research questions and policy issues in various disciplines and contexts. The course is aimed at helping students transform from a consumer to a producer of research. Through various hands-on activities, students will gain first-hand experience of a research process from start to finish, and, subsequently, build confidence and competence for conducting independent dissertation research in the third year. In the process, students will develop life-long problem-solving and analytical skills not only essential for working in the field of social policy but also highly valued by and transferable to other sectors.

This course is divided into two parts. SP201.2 in AT focuses on research design and qualitative methods. SP201.1 in WT focuses on quantitative methods, including statistical programming using STATA. By the end of the course, you will be able to:

- Formulate your own research question
- Propose appropriate data and methods to answer the question
- Recognise ethical issues in social research and address them in research design and conduct
- Conduct qualitative research, including collecting data from in-depth interviews, analysing the data, and writing up the results
- Apply basic statistical methods to quantitative data and interpret the results

Course Code SP210Course Title Development and Social ChangeValue 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WTAssessment Method Essay, Online Assessment and Class Engagement

SP210 invites students to think about how “development” might be considered a taken-for-granted process of “amelioration” or a constantly negotiated process of “transformation” in both the so-called “Global South” and “Global North”; how socio-economic needs are identified, focused, and addressed or ignored in different settings; who can and cannot participate in policy processes and why; and what are the historical, political and social determinants of these processes in different places.

The course is designed to link research/theory to policy and practice. In addition, it introduces students to various policy actors and the ways in which they work together within specific socio-political and economic constraints. The course rigorously links theoretical analysis with empirical enquiry and highlights the importance of identifying and understanding different value positions that underwrite policy thinking.

SP210 is taught from a Critical Development Studies (CDS) lens of analysis, primarily because CDS is concerned with analysing systemic changes needed to achieve economic, social and environmental justice (ie, non-mainstream, alternative development) in the same way that social policy interventions are intended to enhance well-being, particularly of the most marginalised in societies across the globe.

Undergraduate courses summary

Course Code SP230

Course Title Education Policy

Value 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

This course provides an introduction to the main issues in educational policy. It draws on interdisciplinary research literature and has a comparative and international focus. The course aims to show how major concepts used in social policy can be applied to the study of education, for example, equality of opportunity, equity and the distribution of resources.

Issues to be addressed include: policy goals of education; historical development of education and the role of the state in provision and funding; the impact of social characteristics on educational outcomes (class, gender, ethnicity and race); education of children with special educational needs and disabilities; financing education; private schooling; privatisation and the changing role of the state; early years education; school-based education; post-compulsory education including higher education; education systems in comparative perspective and education regimes, decentralisation and devolution. Not all of these issues are covered as separate weekly topics.

The method of teaching on this course makes it more suitable for third year students. This is a particularly popular course. You are advised to apply early.

Course Code SP231

Course Title Poverty, Inequality, and Social Policy

Value 1 Unit Teaching Term AT/WT

Assessment Method Quiz and Online Assessment

This course aims to introduce students to the ways that social policy scholars understand and measure poverty and inequality between groups and across an individual's life course.

The course covers poverty and inequality measurement and examines the role of the state and other institutions (markets and families) in reducing them. It analyses factors that influence poverty and inequality such as gender, age, disability, citizenship and climate change, and related policy responses, including taxation, social security, early childhood education, education, labour market policies, pensions and social care.

The course takes a national and global perspective, drawing on examples from a range of country settings – high-, middle- and low-income countries.

Course Code SP315

Course Title: Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global Souths

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Project

The course critically explores the challenges and opportunities that urbanisation and urbanism (urban transformations) pose in the social, spatial, cultural, economic, institutional and political realms in the urban Global Souths. A plurality of theoretical and conceptual perspectives underpinning each topic area, including policies and planning practices, are explored each week.

Some of the themes explored in the course are, urbanisation, urbanism and social change, theories of urbanisation and urban change, internal migration, gender and age - the rural-urban interface, urban poverty, livelihoods and capabilities, urban labour markets and challenges for social protection, urban housing and tenure, urban basic services, urban governance, and urban social movements and collective action. Cross-cutting themes such as gender and the role of civil society are integrated across the course.

Prospective students must commit themselves to full participation in all aspects of the course, namely attend all lectures and classes. Students are required to read before the lecture, as well as read and discuss the essential readings for the classes. Emphasis is also placed on students connecting given topics and related readings to empirical realities and current events.

Undergraduate courses summary

Undergraduate courses summary

Course Code SP331

Course Title Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries

Value 0.5 Unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Policy Memo

This course aims to analyse and understand the way social policies deploy sexuality categories in regulating everyday life in developing countries, both in its public and private manifestations.

Sexuality is a central part of human experience. Institutions created to deal with human life/wellbeing have considered sexuality as one of the reference points from which to regulate social relations. Perceptions on sexuality are formed in the intersection of socio-political, historical processes and everyday practises in particular societies. Particular perceptions of sexuality in turn influence the way people negotiate access to resources to address their well-being.

In some central areas of social policy sexuality is used as one of the sorting mechanisms (in addition to gender, race among various other categories) to establish entitlements for resources (social, political and economic). In this regard social policy is both informed by perceptions on sexuality and in turn social policy acts as a mechanism of social reproduction of these perspectives impacting people's lives. And while globally high profile cases and rights abuses related to sexuality are important, a narrow global policy focus on these overlooks how more embedded and diverse social policy practices related to sexuality are impacting people's lives in many developing countries. This course aims to explore sexuality and its importance for social policy for developing countries. It aims to consider social policy and particular interventions in their historical contexts, as a way of unpacking the construction of sexuality in the intersection of colonialism, gender, race, class and international policy frameworks in developing countries.

The course also aims to interrogate the relationship between particular social policy prescriptions developed in most industrialised welfare societies and the way some of these are transferred to developing countries. The major concern of the analysis is to bring out the perceptions of sexuality that underwrite these policies and how these interact with existing perceptions of sexualities and their performances (identities, desires and bodily practices) in multiple developing country contexts. These policy areas include, among others, discussions of rights, entitlements, citizenship, same-sex marriage, sexually transmitted disease, HIV/AIDS, family policies, migration/border controls, criminality and employment-related policies.

This course is only available to third year undergraduate students.

Undergraduate courses summary

Course Code SP332

Course Title Social Security Policies

Value 0.5 Unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Essay

The course analyses the purpose, design and impact of social security policies, meaning policies that protect and support household income at times when income from the labour market does not suffice. The need for social security arises both from demographic factors that affect nearly everyone during their life course – childhood, parenthood, old age – and from risk factors that end up affecting only some – unemployment, sickness and disability.

The course takes a comparative approach, examining differences in the design of social security policies across welfare regimes and drawing on examples from different countries. Students will develop an understanding of the challenges and trade-offs that arise in designing social security policies to meet multiple goals, will further their knowledge about the ways systems function in practice, and will develop the tools for assessing the structure and effectiveness of social security in any given country. The course will also consider how successfully social security systems are adapting to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century, including an ageing population, migration, and the changing nature of employment brought about by rapid technological change.

The course will also look at the role of social security in protecting household incomes in times of Crisis, such as the COVID-19 Pandemic.

Most of the examples in the lectures and readings relate to higher- and middle-income countries, but many of the issues covered are also relevant in countries where social security systems are less developed. Students will be encouraged to further their understanding of social security in their country of origin, or another country of their choice, and to draw on this knowledge in classes.

This course is only available to third year undergraduate students.

Course Code SP372Course Title Punishment and Penal PolicyValue 0.5 Unit Teaching Term WT
Assessment Method Essay

This third-year course will run as a half-unit option, and will explore punishment and penal policy from a range of comparative perspectives. Focusing on Anglophone jurisdictions and the rest of the world in equal measure, the course will consider in depth a wide variety of historical and international comparative studies of punishment and penal policy, both from the field of criminology and beyond. In so doing, the course will critically examine theoretical frameworks and empirical research on such issues as:

- the forms state punishment has assumed over time and in different national and regional contexts;
- the array and relative significance of the reasons why punishment and penal policy may develop, qualitatively as well as quantitatively, in particular ways at given historical junctures and in different jurisdictions;
- the relationship between political systems and punishment, with particular reference to processes of democratisation;
- the links between penal policy and different forms of economic organisation, from preindustrial capitalism to welfare capitalism and neoliberalism; and
- the role of punishment in society as explained through psychosocial theories and research.

This course is only available to third year undergraduate students.

Course Code SP333Course Title NGOs, Social Policy and DevelopmentValue 0.5 Unit Teaching Term AT/WT
Assessment Method Essay

While the study of social and public policy has traditionally been concerned with actions taken by governments, the wider non-governmental sector is increasingly recognised as playing a key role. This course focuses on both international and local “non-governmental organisations” (NGOs) that have emerged around the world to address a wide range of social, political and environmental concerns. It offers a critical perspective on NGOs in the context of development and social policy, covering both theoretical and policy issues. The focus is on two main inter-related themes: how NGOs serve as vehicles through which citizens organise, and how NGOs are instruments through which states, businesses and funding agencies pursue their interests.

Most of the examples in the lectures and the readings will relate to the Global South, but many of the issues covered are also relevant in rich industrialised countries. Topics covered include definitions and history of NGOs; the changing policy contexts in which development NGOs operate; conceptual debates around “civil society” and third sector; competing theoretical perspectives on NGOs; the domestic, international and global dimensions of non-governmental action; shifting relationships with other policy actors; service delivery and advocacy roles; international humanitarianism; challenges of NGO legitimacy and accountability; resource dilemmas; voluntarism and volunteering; and NGO organisational growth and change.

Course Code SP335Course Title Migration: Current research, critical approachesValue 0.5 Unit Teaching Term AT
Assessment Method Essay

This interdisciplinary course addresses contemporary global migration issues with reference to both developing and developed country contexts, and to different patterns and forms of migration. The course examines the relationship between migration and social and public policies, including the implications for how migrants and migration are conceptualised, for inequalities in the movement of people, for welfare systems, and for the impacts of migration in countries of origin and destination. Teaching across the course integrates critical theoretical approaches to migration with applications using different migration-related research methods.

Topics covered include: Global migration trends and processes; conceptualisations of migration and migrants; drivers of migration; citizenship and migration; civil society and migration; transnationalism, welfare and migration; climate and migration; gender and migration; and the implications of migration for policies and societies in both sending and receiving countries.

This course is only available to third year undergraduates.

Undergraduate courses summary

Undergraduate Academic and Professional Skills Development Programme

The Academic and Professional Skills Development Programme is made up of a series of workshops, events and activities designed to support our students with their academic studies and professional futures. The programme encourages students to connect what they learn during their time at LSE with the opportunities and requirements of the professional world.

Workshops and Networking Events

Academic skills workshops provide first year students with study skills training (eg, in notetaking, reading and writing) to support them at the start of their academic careers and help them get the most out of their courses and programme. These sessions are compulsory and timetabled under SP100.

Professional skills workshops introduce students in all years to the skills needed to support them to plan successfully for their future careers and thrive after they leave LSE. These are non-timetabled sessions which students are encouraged to attend.

Networking events provide students in all years with the opportunity to interact with our alumni students and develop their knowledge of the variety of industries they work in. They include alumni career talks and alumni panel events. These are non-timetabled sessions which students are encouraged to attend.

Summer Internship Fund Scheme

The Social Policy Internship Fund Scheme provides first and second year students with the opportunity to gain valuable work experience, learn new skills, enhance their employability, and develop their professional network. Funding (based on the London Living Wage) is currently provided for a limited number of internships within a UK registered charity or small to medium sized enterprise (SME) each year. This enables students to apply for funding for internships that would otherwise be unpaid. Internships must be for 140 hours and take place between June and August. Students source the internships themselves with support from LSE Careers. Further information on the scheme and application process is sent to students in the Winter Term.

Alumni Mentoring Scheme

The Alumni Mentoring Scheme gives second and third year students an opportunity to apply to be matched with a mentor to support them with the transition from university to the world of work/further education. Having a mentor gives students the opportunity to: gain an insight into professional life; be supported to take charge of their futures; and learn from someone who has been in their shoes. Students can expect to have three forty-five-minute meetings with their mentor. Any contact beyond this is at the mentor's discretion. Mentors are Social Policy alumni students working in a variety of professional areas. While we aim to match students to mentors as closely as possible, we are not always able to match students to mentors working in areas they aspire to work in. Further information on the scheme and application process is sent to students during the Autumn Term.

Postgraduate courses

COURSE CODE	COURSE TITLE	UNIT	TEACHING TERM	PAGE
SP400	International Social and Public Policy	0.5 unit	AT	18
SP401	Understanding Policy Research	0.5 unit	AT	18
SP403	Academic and Professional Skills Development	0 unit	AT/WT	19
SP410	Migration: Current Research, Critical Approaches	0.5 unit	AT	19
SP411	Social Policy and Development	0.5 unit	AT	20
SP412	Non-Governmental Organisations, Social Policy and Development	0.5 unit	AT	20
SP415	Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global Souths	0.5 unit	WT	21
SP417	Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries	0.5 unit	WT	22
SP418	Global Social Policy and International Organisations	0.5 unit	WT	22
SP419	Social Movements, Activism, Social Policy	0.5 unit	WT	23
SP420	Understanding Policy Research (Advanced)	0.5 unit	WT	23
SP430	Social Security Policies	0.5 unit	WT	24

KEY

COURSE VALUE			TEACHING TERM
■ 0 unit	■ 0.5 unit	■ 1 unit	■ Autumn Term (AT)	■ Winter Term (WT)	■ Both Autumn and Winter (AT/WT)

Postgraduate course convenors, see p31

Click here to view the postgraduate course guides online

COURSE CODE	COURSE TITLE	UNIT	TEACHING TERM	PAGE
SP432	Education Policy, Reform and Financing	0.5 unit	AT	25
SP434	Behavioural Public Policy	0.5 unit	WT	25
SP442	The Future of Work and Social Policy	0.5 unit	WT	26
SP443	The Social Policy of Climate Change	0.5 unit	WT	27
SP473	Policing, Security and Globalisation	0.5 unit	WT	28
SP475	Riots, Disorder and Urban Violence	0.5 unit	AT	28
SP476	Punishment and Penal Policy	0.5 unit	WT	29
SP477	Foundations of Criminology and Criminal Justice	0.5 unit	AT	30
SP478	Special Issues in Criminology and Criminal Justice	0.5 unit	WT	30

KEY

COURSE VALUE			TEACHING TERM
■ 0 unit	■ 0.5 unit	■ 1 unit	■ Autumn Term (AT)	■ Winter Term (WT)	■ Both Autumn and Winter (AT/WT)

Postgraduate course convenors, see p31

Click here to view the postgraduate course guides online

Postgraduate courses summary

Course Code SP400

Course Title International Social and Public Policy

Value 0.5 Unit Teaching Term AT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

This course engages with the social and public policy challenges facing states and citizens across the world.

It introduces students to core issues, concepts, actors and debates shaping our understanding of social and public policy, its drivers and impacts. It outlines the questions raised by efforts to ensure a healthy, educated and productive population, to protect those without other means of support, and to reduce inequalities of eg, gender, class, and ethnicity. It discusses diverse policy approaches to these issues, their ideological underpinnings, and the varying configurations of actors involved in the policy process – the state, the market, civil society, the family, and international organisations.

The course explores applications to a range of policy domains, such as education, urbanisation, health, family, social care, migration, inequality and redistribution, and to varied country contexts. The course is informed by an international and comparative approach that considers both rich and poor country contexts and international dimensions and locates these within a historical understanding of both national and global processes.

Course Code SP401

Course Title Understanding Policy Research

Value 0.5 Unit Teaching Term AT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

This course aims to provide an understanding of issues associated with the research process, in the context of the MSc in International Social and Public Policy. The course includes an examination of philosophical issues underpinning research methods in social policy; the place of different research methods (qualitative and quantitative) in international social and public policy; the use of research; and the role of evidence in informing social and public policy.

This is not a "how to" methods course. Instead, students will be equipped to become critical readers and users of research. Students will gain an understanding of the role of research in the policy process, and of the philosophical underpinnings of different approaches to ISPP research, both quantitative and qualitative; they will scrutinise which research designs are appropriate for different kinds of policy investigation; and learn to critique the validity of the implications for policy drawn by researchers, given the methods they have used.

Course Code SP403

Course Title Academic and Professional Skills Development

Value 0 unit Teaching Term AT and WT

Assessment Method This course is non-credit bearing, and there is no formal assessment.

The course will consist of a number of workshops in the AT focusing on the development of academic skills (to include effective reading; academic writing; presentation skills; networking skills; time management); and in the WT focusing on the development of professional skills, and working in the Social Policy sector.

The course will complement students' academic studies and support them to get the most out of their courses and Programme; while also helping them to make the link between the skills and knowledge they develop during their time at LSE and the opportunities and requirements of a range of careers in Social Policy.

Course Code SP410

Course Title Migration: Current Research, Critical Approaches

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term AT

Assessment Method Coursework

This interdisciplinary course addresses contemporary global migration issues with reference to both developing and developed country contexts, and to different patterns and forms of migration. The course examines the relationship between migration and social and public policies, including the implications for how migrants and migration are conceptualised, for inequalities in the movement of people, for welfare systems, and for the impacts of migration in countries of origin and destination. Teaching across the course integrates critical theoretical approaches to migration with applications using different migration-related research methods.

Topics covered include: global migration trends and processes; conceptualisations of migration and different types of migrant; drivers of migration, and migrant motivations; citizenship; transnationalism; welfare and migration; gender and migration; and the implications of migration for policies and societies in both sending and receiving countries.

SP410 is a compulsory course on the ISPP (Migration) specialism.

Course Code SP411Course Title Social Policy and DevelopmentValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term ATAssessment Method Essay

This course provides the analytical tools needed to understand and critically evaluate the key practical challenges of social development. A wide range of development contexts will be discussed using empirical research and case studies.

Key themes include: linking social policy theory, implementation and practice; race and development; intersectionality and gender; policy actors, regulation and decentralisation, civil society, markets and development, participation; informality; and conflict and development. Some of these themes are treated as cross-cutting issues as appropriate.

SP411 is a compulsory course on the ISPP (Development) specialism.

Course Code SP412Course Title Non-Governmental Organisations,
Social Policy and DevelopmentValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term ATAssessment Method Online Assessment

The course focuses on the specialised field of non-governmental organisations (NGOs) within the field of social policy and development, and considers theoretical and policy issues.

Main topics include the history and theory of NGOs; the changing policy contexts in which NGOs operate; NGO service delivery and advocacy roles in policy; NGO relationships with other institutional actors including government, donors and private sector; challenges of NGO effectiveness and accountability; NGO organisational growth and change; and conceptual debates around civil society, social capital, social movements and globalisation.

SP412 is a compulsory course on the ISPP (NGOs) specialism.

Course Code SP415Course Title Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global SouthsValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term WTAssessment Method Project and Essay

The course critically explores the challenges and opportunities that urbanisation and urban transformations pose in the social, spatial, economic, institutional and political realms in the urban Global South. A plurality of theoretical and conceptual perspectives informing contemporary policies and planning practices are explored each week.

Some of the themes explored in the course are, urbanisation, urbanism and social change, theories of urbanisation and urban change, internal migration and the rural-urban interface, urban poverty and livelihoods, urban labour markets and livelihoods, urban housing and tenure, urban basic services, urban governance, and urban social movements and collective action. Cross-cutting themes such as gender and the role of civil society are also explored.

Prospective students must be willing to commit themselves to full participation in all aspects of the course, including an element of art. They will be required to read selected readings before the lecture, read and discuss the essential readings for the weekly seminars, and read more widely and actively participate in the seminars. This course seeks a weekly commitment from students to undertake a non-assessed activity entitled My_City, a short desk-based piece of research and writing that links key issues emerging from the lecture to a city of their choice with the view to meeting one of the pedagogical aims of this course, namely, the link between theory and policy/practice.

Postgraduate courses summary

Course Code SP417

Course Title Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries

Value 0.5 Unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Essay

This course aims to analyse and understand the way social policies deploy sexuality categories in regulating everyday life in developing countries, both in its public and private manifestations. It aims to consider social policy and particular interventions in their historical contexts, as a way of unpacking the construction of sexuality in the intersection of colonialism, gender, race, class and international policy frameworks in developing countries. The course also aims to interrogate the relationship between particular social policy prescriptions developed in most industrialised welfare societies and the way some of these are transferred to developing countries. The major concern of the analysis is to bring out the perceptions of sexuality that underwrite these policies and how these interact with existing perceptions of sexualities and their performances (identities, desires and bodily practices) in multiple developing country contexts. These policy areas include, among others, discussions of rights, entitlements, citizenship, same-sex marriage, sexually transmitted disease, HIV/AIDS, family policies, migration/border controls, criminality and employment-related policies.

Course Code SP418

Course Title Global Social Policy and International Organisations

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

What do the, the Catholic Church, Bill and Melissa Gates, UNICEF and the World Bank have in common? They are in one way or another involved in social policy that goes beyond the nation state. Policy could be seen as the exercise of political power and this political power has often been concentrated within the nation state. Far from the traditional study of policy this includes the effect of globalisation on a variety of actors in social policy. This course examines how globalisation has changed the way we perceive areas such as health, education, social care and other areas that concern social citizenship. The course examines the international policy environment, particularly intergovernmental organisations; bilateral and multilateral aid agencies and non-governmental organisations (NGOs), which influence the social policy environment in developing countries. The impact of the inter-governmental policy process on policy outcomes is examined. The same goes for religious groups, social movements and corporations that all play a role in global social policy. The main goal of the course is not only to open up the understanding of social policy and globalisation but also to show the complexity of goals and actors of social policy. It is expected that the students will devote considerable time to reading and preparing for the seminars.

Course Code SP419

Course Title Social Movements, Activism and Social Policy

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

The course begins by examining theories of social movements, collective action, and contentious politics. It then moves on to examine how social movements engage with the policy process and the ways in which social movement activism informs social policy formulation and implementation. It examines the nature, past and present roles of social movements and their potential capacity in shaping social policy in developed and developing countries, and in democratic, hybrid, or authoritarian regimes. The course covers theoretical arguments and examines empirical examples and case studies.

The course examines the following topics: the role and impact of social movement activism in identifying and meeting needs; the role of grassroots mobilisations and solidarity; how movements are affected by regulatory frameworks; how and when movements achieve their objectives; movements relations with other actors (including, NGOs, trade unions, political parties, etc.); populism.

The course considers the development, transformation, autonomy, interdependence, and probity of social movements. It draws on examples of social movements in different periods, countries, and areas of activity to examine and analyse how change happens and the obstacles to change.

The course also offers an accompanying film programme with four film screenings and discussions in LT. The remaining films are for students to watch in their own time.

Postgraduate courses summary

Course Code SP420

Course Title Understanding Policy Research (Advanced)

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Essay

The course equips you with transferable quantitative and qualitative research design skills, including the design of policy evaluations, and an in-depth understanding of the role of different types of research in the policy-making process. It is an advanced course and students are expected to already have a grasp of basic research design principles and their application to social and public policy, for example as covered in MY400 Fundamentals of Research Design or SP401 Understanding Policy Research, both of which run in the MT, although these courses are not a formal pre-requisite. Lectures are given by leading academics engaged in research using the methods under consideration, some of which has achieved substantial policy impact. Students are encouraged to critically assess applications of complex research methods to contemporary national and international social and public policy questions. Topics may include uses of: mixed methods policy evaluation; participatory research; researching organisations (including organisational anthropology); longitudinal and life history analysis; micro-simulation techniques; systematic reviews, meta-analysis and meta-ethnographies; and small area, geographical and internationally comparative research. The relationship between research and policymaking is a theme that runs throughout the course.

SP420 is a compulsory course on the ISPP (Research) specialism.

Course Code SP434

Course Title Behavioural Public Policy

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Project

The application of behavioural economics and behavioural science to public policy issues has been, and continues to be, a major theme in the policy discourse internationally. This course offers students a thorough grounding in the theory and findings that define behavioural economics, from the major violations of standard rational choice theory to prospect theory and the theories of human motivation.

The course goes on to consider the conceptual policy frameworks that have been informed by behavioural economics, with examples - so-called nudge, shove and budge policies - illustrated so as to highlight how these frameworks are applied in practice. Students will also be exposed to the different behavioural-informed schools of thought that have prescribed divergent paths for public sector governance.

Course Code SP432

Course Title Education Policy, Reform and Financing

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term AT

Assessment Method Online Assessment

This course considers education policy, reform and financing across a range of countries. It uses concepts and tools from a number of academic disciplines – social policy, sociology, economics, politics and philosophy – to scrutinise education. Throughout the course, there is particular focus on equity, social justice and the distribution of resources.

Issues to be addressed include: the impact of social characteristics on educational outcomes (class, gender and race and ethnicity, with a cross-cutting focus on special educational needs and ideas of "inclusion") and related policy reforms; accountability and market-oriented reforms in education; privatisation and the changing role of the state; power and the politics of educational policy making; global policy transfer in education; early years education; school-based education and post-compulsory education; education systems in comparative perspective. Not all of these issues are covered as separate weekly topics.

The course will also look at the role of social security in protecting household incomes in times of crisis, such as the COVID-19 pandemic.

The course will also consider how successfully social security systems are adapting to meeting the challenges of the twenty-first century, including an ageing population, migration, and the changing nature of employment brought about by rapid technological change.

Most of the examples in the lectures and readings relate to higher- and middle-income countries, but the course aims to be of interest and relevance to students from all countries. Students will be encouraged to further their understanding of social security in their country of origin, or another country of their choice, and to draw on this knowledge in classes.

Course Code SP430

Course Title Social Security Policies

Value 0.5 unit Teaching Term WT

Assessment Method Essay

The course analyses the purposes, design and impact of social security policies, meaning policies that protect and support household income at times when income from the labour market does not suffice. The need for social security arises both from demographic factors that affect nearly everyone during their life course – childhood, parenthood, old age – and from risk factors that will end up affecting only some – unemployment, sickness and disability.

The course takes a comparative approach, examining differences in the design of social security policies across welfare regimes and drawing on examples from different countries. Students will develop an understanding of the challenges and trade-offs that arise in designing social security policies to meet multiple goals, will further their knowledge about the ways systems function in practice, and will develop the tools for assessing the structure and effectiveness of social security in any given country.

Course Code SP442Course Title The Future of Work and Social PolicyValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term WTAssessment Method Essay

Work is the central mechanisms for the distribution of economic capital in most societies today. It also plays a crucial role in the distribution of non-material goods such as status. A range of social policies embed the world of work, e.g., by regulating access to it or securing individuals when they are out of work. Moreover, in many societies policies are financed through taxes on income from work. This course starts from the observation that the world of work and employment has seen important shifts over the past decades. Some detect a growing precarization of work in post-industrial societies. In many low- and middle-income countries informal work plays an essential role. Technological change has led to polarisation of the work force locally and globally. Projecting out technological change some fear that automation will lead to dramatic job-loss in the not so distant future. Most recently, the COVID19 pandemic led to dramatic reorganization of work routines. Against this backdrop, this course takes an internationally comparative perspective to engage with the questions of what role social policies have played to embed the world of work in the past and how they will have to adapt to face the challenges that are suggested to come.

The course is structured in three blocks:

First, the course will start by discussing how we define work (e.g. by asking about the difference between paid and unpaid work and gendered consequences of the distinction), then assessing the central role work plays in contemporary societies in low, middle, and high income countries, and by analysing how social policies embed work in different ways across contexts.

Second, the course will investigate the social implications of recent changes in the world of work, such as precarization, informality, digitalization and technological change, and then cover different perspectives on how we might expect the world of work to change in the mid and long run.

In the third and most substantial block the course will then discuss potential strategies for social policies to deal with the challenges of recent and future developments. The course will consider different proposals that range from "fixing things so that the can stay as they are" to more transformative and utopian ones.

Course Code SP443Course Title The Social Policy of Climate ChangeValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term WTAssessment Method Essay

Climate change is one of the world's most pressing problems with significant implications for human's welfare and wellbeing both now and in the future. Swift and significant policy action is therefore necessary to both adapt to and mitigate climate change. This course examines the social and public policy of climate change, from both a domestic and international perspective. In doing so, the course is divided in to three parts. First, the course documents the nature of the problem at hand by exploring the measurement of climate change and its possible human and societal impacts. Second, we focus on policy responses to climate change, examining how policy is formulated and implemented at both the domestic and international level. Finally, the course focuses on applying these insights and tools to issues such as economic development, migration, non-governmental organisations, and political violence. In completing the course students will have a fuller understanding of the societal impacts of climate change and policy responses, with an eye to communicating scientific evidence to an audience of academics, policymakers, and stakeholders.

Course Code SP473Course Title Policing, Security and GlobalisationValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term WTAssessment Method Essay and Coursework

The sub-discipline of police studies is now well-established and is flourishing. Whilst much traditional policing scholarship has focused on policing within particular societies, increasingly attention is being drawn to both international and comparative matters. Indeed, the social and economic changes associated with globalisation have affected policing as all else. This course will focus on transnational public and private policing, and on the issues and challenges raised by globalisation: from the policing of transitional societies and emergent democracies, the policing of migration, of public order, through to the study of new social movements seeking radical reform of policing and the provision of security.

Course Code SP475Course Title Riots, Disorder and Urban ViolenceValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term ATAssessment Method Essay and Presentation

This course focuses on urban or collective violence, or what more colloquially tend to be referred to as "riots". From Hong Kong and Santiago to the Gilets Jaunes in Paris and the uprisings in America after the death of George Floyd, this is a subject of great contemporary relevance. The course will consider the various approaches that have been taken to this subject – via history, psychology and sociology – and, focusing on particular examples, the course will examine some of the core issues in the field including: the causes of riots; psychological versus sociological explanations; the role of race/ethnicity; the impact of traditional and new social media on the nature and organisation of rioting; the role and changing nature of the policing of urban disorder; and how riots might be understood both historically and comparatively. The primary means of assessment will be via a research-based essay focusing on a single "riot".

Course Code SP476Course Title Punishment and Penal PolicyValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term WTAssessment Method Essay

This course runs as a half-unit option, and explores punishment and penal policy from a range of comparative perspectives. Focusing on Anglophone jurisdictions and the rest of the world in equal measure, the course considers in depth a wide variety of historical and international comparative studies of punishment and penal policy, both from the field of criminology and beyond.

In so doing, the course critically examines theoretical frameworks and empirical research on such issues as:

- the forms state punishment has assumed over time and in different national and regional contexts;
- the array and relative significance of the reasons why punishment and penal policy may develop, qualitatively as well as quantitatively, in particular ways at given historical junctures and in different jurisdictions;
- the relationship between political systems and punishment, with particular reference to processes of democratisation;
- the links between penal policy and different forms of economic organisation, from preindustrial capitalism to welfare capitalism and neoliberalism; and
- the role of punishment in society as explained through psychosocial theories and research.

Thanks to its substantive foci and broad comparative approach, the course enhances provision in the School in the field of penology (eg, the course "Explaining Punishment: Philosophy, Political Economy, Sociology" (LL4CL), taught by Professors Lacey and Ramsay in the Law Department).

Course Code SP477Course Title Foundations in Criminology and Criminal JusticeValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term ATAssessment Method Online Assessment

The course provides a detailed and critical introduction foundation to in the study of crime and criminal justice, through a focus on some of its constitutive ideas, institutions, practices, and participants. Lectures in the first half of term provide an overview of a criminological understanding of crime and deviance. Lectures in the second half of term provide an overview of a criminological understanding of justice policy. Throughout the course, particular emphasis is devoted to the historical, conceptual, and theoretical traditions that make up — and subvert — criminology's canon.

Course Code SP478Course Title Special Issues in Criminology and Criminal JusticeValue 0.5 unit Teaching Term WTAssessment Method Essay

The course provides a detailed and critical review of the varied perspectives that scholars in and beyond Social Policy bring to bear in the study of crime and criminal justice. Each lecture illustrates and applies a given perspective to one of the titular 'Special Issues' with which criminologists grapple. Throughout the course, particular emphasis is devoted to setting those perspectives in conversation, with a view toward exploring lines of potential complement, confrontation, and integration.

Although SP478 is designed as a successor to SP477, SP477 is not a prerequisite for enrolment into SP478. However, students with little prior criminological familiarity are encouraged to consult the Indicative Readings before the Winter Term commences.

Undergraduate course convenors

Course	Course Convenor	Email
SP100 Understanding International Social and Public Policy	Lucinda Platt	l.platt@lse.ac.uk
SP101 Foundations of Social Policy Research	Kitty Stewart	k.j.stewart@lse.ac.uk
SP111 Social Economics and Policy	Almudena Sevilla	a.sevilla@lse.ac.uk
SP112 Politics of Social Policy Making	Liam Beiser-McGrath	l.f.beiser-mcgrath@lse.ac.uk
SP200 Comparative and International Social Policy	TBC	TBC
SP201 Research Methods for Social Policy	Shuang Chen	s.chen114@lse.ac.uk
SP210 Development and Social Change	Robtel Neajai Pailey	r.n.pailey@lse.ac.uk
SP230 Education Policy	Fiona Gogescu	f.t.gogescu@lse.ac.uk
SP231 Poverty, Inequality, and Social Policy	Iva Tasseva	i.tasseva@lse.ac.uk
SP315 Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global Souths	Sunil Kumar	s.kumar@lse.ac.uk
SP331 Sexuality, Everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries	Hakan Seckinelgin	m.h.seckinelgin@lse.ac.uk
SP332 Social Security Policies	Kitty Stewart	k.j.stewart@lse.ac.uk
SP333 NGOs, Social Policy and Development	Tim Hildebrandt	t.r.hildebrandt@lse.ac.uk
SP335 Migration: Current Research, Critical Approaches	Lucinda Platt	l.platt@lse.ac.uk
SP336 Behavioural Public Policy	Adam Oliver	a.j.oliver@lse.ac.uk
SP372 Punishment and Penal Policy	Leonidas Cheliotis	l.cheliotis@lse.ac.uk

Postgraduate course convenors

Course	Course Convenor	Email
SP400 International Social and Public Policy	Sonia Exley	s.exley@lse.ac.uk
SP401 Understanding Policy Research	Thomas Biegert/ Johann Koehler	t.biegert@lse.ac.uk/ j.koehler@lse.ac.uk
SP403 Academic and Professional Skills Development	Leonidas Cheliotis	l.cheliotis@lse.ac.uk
SP410 Migration: Current Research, Critical Approaches	Lucinda Platt	l.platt@lse.ac.uk
SP411 Social Policy and Development	Sunil Kumar	s.kumar@lse.ac.uk
SP412 Non-Governmental Organisations, Social Policy and Development	Tim Hildebrandt	t.r.hildebrandt@lse.ac.uk
SP415 Urbanisation and Social Policy in the Global South	Sunil Kumar	s.kumar@lse.ac.uk
SP417 Sexuality, everyday Lives and Social Policy in Developing Countries	Hakan Seckinelgin	m.h.seckinelgin@lse.ac.uk
SP418 Global Social Policy and International Organisations	Hakan Seckinelgin	m.h.seckinelgin@lse.ac.uk
SP419 Social Movements, Activism, Social Policy	Tim Hildebrandt	t.r.hildebrandt@lse.ac.uk
SP420 Understanding Policy Research (Advanced)	Almudena Sevilla	a.sevilla@lse.ac.uk
SP430 Social Security Policies	Kitty Stewart	k.j.stewart@lse.ac.uk
SP432 Education Policy, Reform and Financing	Sonia Exley	s.exley@lse.ac.uk
SP434 Behavioural Public Policy	Adam Oliver	a.j.oliver@lse.ac.uk
SP442 The Future of Work and Social Policy	Thomas Biegert	t.biegert@lse.ac.uk
SP443 Social Policy of Climate Change	Liam Beiser-McGrath	l.f.beiser-mcgrath@lse.ac.uk
SP477 Foundations of Criminology and Criminal Justice	Johann Koehler	j.koehler@lse.ac.uk
SP478 Special Issues in Criminology and Criminal Justice	Johann Koehler	j.koehler@lse.ac.uk
SP473 Policing, Security and Globalisation	Tim Newburn	t.newburn@lse.ac.uk
SP475 Riots, Disorder and Urban Violence	Tim Newburn	t.newburn@lse.ac.uk
SP476 Punishment and Penal Policy	Leonidas Cheliotis	l.cheliotis@lse.ac.uk

Undergraduate Programme Team

Email: Socialpolicy.ug@lse.ac.uk

Tel: 020 7 955 6001

Clare Gorman

Undergraduate Programme Manager

Jake Watkins

Undergraduate Programme Administrator

Sophie Gavriel

Undergraduate Programme Administrator

Postgraduate Programme Team

Email: Socialpolicy.msc@lse.ac.uk

Tel: 020 7 955 6001

Craig Stewart

Teaching Operations Manager (Postgraduate)

Nathaniel Ocquaye

Postgraduate Programme Administrator

Shamsuz Zaman

Postgraduate Programme Officer

Sevilay Erdogan

PhD Programme Administrator

Department of Social Policy

London School of Economics and Political Science

2nd Floor, Old Building
Houghton Street
London WC2A 2AE

lse.ac.uk/social-policy

@LSESocialPolicy

